usual affability, and handed over three sixes with two other cards to Brown, but luck seemed to be with the "Doc" this time, and he "skinned" three jacks out of his hand, which he promptly showed to Vic., and Vic. as promptly gave them away to Brown.

The doctor raised the blind $20, and Brown, although he knew that three jacks were against him, gave up the requisite amount to try and better his hand. Brown discarded two cards and the "Doc" not wishing to be im-polite, drew the same number which he carelessly threw on top of his jack without looking at them and bet $20. Brown was more cautious than his opponent and scanning his cards, found a pair of aces filling his hand, thereby making a "full" by "sixes." Knowing that the "Doctor" had three jacks, it was 99 chances to 100 that his hand would not be bettered, and on this sound reasoning he saw the doctor's $20 and went $100 better. The doctor saw the $100 and went $200 better, and there is no doubt that the betting would have continued until now only for the slight circumstance that Brown was forced to "call," owing to a lack of the neces-sary "wherewithal," but not until the neat sum of about $900 lay piled up on the table.

Then the Chan-nel island cattle all went under the name of Alderneys, and the islands were known as the Alderney islands, at least in England, where I saw at ton posters bearing this name. But the Guernseys were then much more like what they are now than the Jer-seys were like what they are. Moreover, my opinion is that the Jersey butter is neither remarkab for its firmness nor its color as compared with Guernaey butter. Indeed, I know it, and know that the butter of my Ayrshires is harder at this season, and has been the last month, and also in the winter than that of my Jerseys. And I find the mixture of my dairy very conven ient, because in the winter the Jerseys soften the Ayrshires' butter, and in the summer the Ayrshires harden the Jersey butter. But I confess I have no Alphea, nor any Rex, nor Commassie in mine, my Jerseys not even being recorded, although eligible, because
